Rationale: This capstone course showcases the culmination of students' media work created during their college coursework. Successful completion of this course is required before students can be granted a Mass Communication degree.

Expected Outcomes: At the end of the semester, successful students will:
1) Create a current résumé;
2) Select their best mass communication work created during their tenure at the college;
3) Professionally present the résumé and their work in a portfolio case or binder; and
4) Professionally present the résumé and their work in an online portfolio on a website (using a website builder like WordPress, Weebly or Wix)

Methods of Instruction: Students will meet three scheduled times in person with the professor. Each week, students will electronically send a report of their work toward completion of the course; the professor will provide feedback on their progress each week, as well as during meeting times.

Assessment (Including Critical Thinking measurements):
Students will be assessed on attendance, participation in meetings with professor, résumé assignment, and portfolios.

Grade scale: A’s are assigned for on-time, error-free, publishable/distributable work presented professionally. B’s are assigned for on-time work that has minor, easily fixable errors, is presented professionally, and could be published or distributed with minimal extra work. C’s are assigned to work that meets deadline more than 70 percent of the time, needs some revision but has potential for publication or distribution, and makes an attempt at being professionally presented. D’s are earned for work that is consistently late, has major flaws, is presented in a less-than-professional manner, and would not be appropriate for any type of publication/distribution. F’s are earned for late, error-ridden, unacceptable, and unprofessional work.
